Farming Thanksgiving Ingredients in MapleStory Cla

Autor: JackWalker - 2026/11/14 07:26

Seasonal events in MapleStory Classic World often give players a reason to revisit familiar maps and explore different parts of the game. The upcoming Thanksgiving Pumpkin Pie event is a good example. Starting with the November 18, 2026, Forgotten Hollow update, players will be able to collect cooking ingredients by defeating eligible monsters throughout Maple World. If you are already farming MapleStory Classic World Items or leveling a character, you can make this event part of your normal routine instead of treating it as a completely separate activity.

The event is relatively simple, but choosing the right hunting area can make a noticeable difference in how quickly you collect materials. Since eligible monsters are spread across different regions, you can focus on maps that suit your character's level and damage rather than following one fixed route. This flexibility also makes it easier to balance event progress with your other goals.

Starting the Pumpkin Pie Quest
To begin, visit Grandma Benson and accept the Thanksgiving quest. She is traditionally located in Henesys, making the town a convenient place to return to after farming.

The event is based on the classic Thanksgiving Pumpkin Pie activity. Its original recipe uses four ingredients:

Pie Crust

Pumpkin

Flour

Sugar

These are the materials players should expect to collect for the seasonal exchange. However, the original requirements come from an older version of MapleStory, so do not assume that every quantity will remain unchanged in MSCW.

Once the November update becomes available, open your quest log and check Grandma Benson's current instructions. This is the safest way to confirm exactly what you need before spending hours farming.

Understanding the Monster Level Requirement
One of the most useful details about this event is that ingredients can drop from monsters at Level 10 and above.

You are not restricted to a special Thanksgiving map. Instead, you can hunt in different regions as long as the monsters satisfy the level requirement.

For newer characters, this means there is no reason to keep farming starter monsters such as Snails or low-level Shrooms. They are below the required level and will not provide the event ingredients.

If your character has just reached Level 10, look for monsters that are manageable with your current equipment. You do not need to challenge the strongest enemies available. A map where you can defeat monsters quickly is usually a better starting point.

Choosing an Efficient Farming Location
A good farming location should offer three things: suitable monster levels, convenient movement, and enough enemies to keep you busy.

Kerning City Construction Sites are worth testing, especially if your character can comfortably defeat Green Mushrooms. Their straightforward layouts make them convenient for repeated hunting sessions.

Kerning Subway is another familiar option. Players who already spend time there can continue their normal training without constantly changing locations.

However, these are examples rather than guaranteed best-in-slot farming maps. Your class and character progression matter. A Warrior may prefer a different layout from a Mage, while characters with strong ranged attacks may benefit from maps with multiple platforms.

Try to avoid maps where you spend more time climbing, waiting for respawns, or traveling between monsters than actually fighting.

Combine Event Farming with Normal Progression
The biggest advantage of this Thanksgiving activity is that it does not require you to sacrifice your regular progression.

Instead of creating a separate farming schedule, choose a suitable training map and collect ingredients while earning experience. You can also look for monsters that provide useful equipment, scrolls, and other valuable drops.

This approach makes each hunting session more productive. Even if you do not collect every required ingredient immediately, you will still have made progress on your character.

Inventory management is another detail worth considering. Regular monster drops can quickly fill your available slots, particularly during longer sessions. Keep some space available for Thanksgiving materials and sell or store unnecessary equipment when needed.

Look Out for Escaped Thanksgiving Turkeys
The Escaped Thanksgiving Turkey is another event feature worth watching for.

These roaming event monsters can be encountered while hunting in the field. Catching them provides additional classic rewards, giving players another activity to complete while collecting the four cooking ingredients.

You do not need to change your entire farming route just to search for them. Simply pay attention to your surroundings as you move through the map.

If you encounter one, take the opportunity to deal with it before returning to your normal monster rotation.

Available Thanksgiving Rewards
Grandma Benson's exchange is expected to include several themed housing decorations. According to the November update preview, the featured rewards include:

Item

Category

Harvest Hay Bale

Housing furniture

Harvest Feast Table

Housing furniture

Roast Turkey Platter

Housing furniture

Pumpkin Harvest Wagon

Housing furniture

Classic consumables and gear

Event rewards

These decorations give collectors something seasonal to work toward, while returning consumables and gear provide a nostalgic connection to older MapleStory events.

The exact exchange requirements should be checked in-game after launch.

Final Thoughts
The best way to approach this event is to keep your farming routine simple. Choose a suitable Level 10+ map, defeat monsters at a comfortable pace, and collect ingredients whenever they drop. There is no need to spend the entire day searching for a perfect location when your regular training area may already work. If you want to improve your character's preparation before the event, you can also buy MSCW Items and focus your farming time on completing Grandma Benson's Thanksgiving quest.
